

Business was brisk at Bucks County Antiques Show

Chris Wise of Errant Artifacts, Quakertown played the part of an old-time storekeeper.

For the last eight years, William D'Anjolell has brought antiques dealers to the Eagle Fire Company hall in New Hope for the Bucks County Antiques Show, a benefit for the Elizabeth Glaser Pediatric AIDS Foundation.

He and his wife, Linda, were careful to choose a beneficiary that is an all-volunteer nonprofit organization.

"The show is eclectic," Bill D'Anjolell says. "The goal is as much variety as possible." Entry is by invitation and some of the dealers have been with the show from the beginning.

"We look for quality and reasonable prices," he said. "It's a great place for shopping for birthday gifts and other gifts."

On that windy, early April day, business was brisk in the show space.

Plans are already in the works for next year's show. It's a labor of love for Bill, a part-time job that he works on all year.

Photographs
by Bridget Wingert

Mike Young of Young and Old Antiques, Chalfont.

William D'Anjolell, show manager, with wife, Karen.

Donna Panew of New Hope, who deals in European porcelain and prints.